Description

A silver mounted cut glass ruby flash decanter by C J Vander, London 1973.

Ruby flash glass is a type of decorative glass that features a striking red hue, achieved by applying a thin layer of gold-infused glass over clear glass. The process involves "flashing" the ruby colour onto the surface, creating a vibrant, jewel-like appearance. Ruby flash glass has been popular in fine glassware and art objects, especially during the Victorian and Art Nouveau periods. It is often used for ornamental pieces, vases, and stained glass windows, adding elegance and vivid colour.
