Description

A Hulkin & Heath silver plate chafing dish on a stand with spirit burner, circa 1840

Hulkin & Heath Silversmiths was a respected Birmingham firm active in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Founded by Albert Edward Hulkin and John Thomas Heath, the company became well known for producing high-quality silver and electroplated wares. Their designs often reflected late Victorian and Edwardian tastes, combining functionality with refined decorative detail.

Hulkin & Heath supplied a wide range of items, including tea services, tableware, and presentation pieces, many of which were exported internationally. The firm registered several hallmarks and gained a reputation for solid craftsmanship, contributing significantly to Birmingham's prominence as a centre of British silversmithing during this period.
